Biography

The master guitarist Sebastião Tapajós, christened Sebastião Pena Marcião, quite literally made a name for himself only after adopting the name of a beloved river. Renowned for both his phenomenal technique and his scholarship, Tapajós created a strand of Brazilian guitar music that combines the classic and popular with the regional folklore of the Amazon. His numerous compositions, the product of a career lasting more than 60 years, are unceasingly re-recorded throughout the world (with some of these versions presented in this work). His 90 albums, comprising both his own music and classic covers, remain in demand internationally, sold and stocked in their original formats and within compilations found throughout the Internet. Tapajós's global standing has brought attention to Brazilian culture, the Amazon region and particularly the state of Pará, to which he dedicates special deference. His name is an homage to the stream and the land from which he voyaged to attain worldwide acclaim, and the place where he returned and lives to this day: the river Tapajós.

Childhood and first influences

Sebastião Tapajós, the third son of seven brothers, was born on April 16, 1942, in a boat on the Surubiú River, an arm of the Amazon. Having left his father's small convenience store "Casa Primavera" back in the district of Alenquer, the family set forth towards Santarém in the state of Pará. Still a boy, Sebastião moved to this city at the confluence of the Tapajós and Amazonas, later adopting the surname "Tapajós" in honor of those rivers which bathe Santarém. It is not a coincidence that the Amazon and its miraculous nature came to have such an enormous influence on his work.

Sebastião attended elementary school at the Frei Ambrosio School Group and junior high at Dom Amando School in Santarém. He had an ordinary childhood, like that of the millions of Brazilian riverside children he attended school alongside, though it certainly couldn't be said that he was an ordinary child. His special ear was formed from an early age, a result of his father's guitar playing in the late hours of the evening. "Senhor Marcião" was the owner of a business which sold textiles, foodstuffs, hygiene, cleaning products, and medicines, in addition to plantation activities such as jute and cattle breeding. He often joined his employees on the guitar. According to Sebastião, he repaired his father's guitar himself when it popped open, most likely due to the hot and humid climate of the Amazon.

Naturally, Sebastião was greatly influenced by what he heard on the radio and his hand-cranked phonograph throughout the 40s and 50s. In those days, who wouldn't delight in the music of Dilermando Reis, Luís Bonfá, Pixinguinha, and Garoto?

In the 50s, Sebastião began to study music more formally with his private teacher, João Fona. At the time, he didn't seem to identify with the complexities of music theory, preferring to simply play. For ten to twelve years, Tapajós participated in a band formed by professional musicians who called themselves “Os Mocarongos”. They played in nightclubs, and eventually Sebastião began getting paid.

First presentations in the 60's

In Belém, the state capital of Pará, there was another band operating under the same name. At the invitation of Professor Gelmirez Melo e Silva, the founder of this twin group, Tapajós moved to join them in 1958. Later, at the turn of the decade, Tapajós began his study music theory and harmony with professors Ribamar and Drago.

Marking the start of his recording career, Tapajós recorded in 1962 called “Baile de Estudantes” (The Student Ball) on the “Mocambo” Label. He soon began presenting himself throughout the social circles of Belém and receiving modest payment. Tapajós appeared with his birth name on this album, its cover relating the names of its tracks with the young group of members who participated in the album as well as their respective schools.

In 1963, Sebastião formed a new group of professional musicians and singers to record the LP “Apresentando Sebastião Tapajós e seu Conjunto” (Featuring Sebastião Tapajós and Ensemble), a work that anticipated his brilliant career. Later that year, Sebastião participated in a guitar technique course for 33 days with Professor Othon Salleiroin in Rio de Janeiro. Sebastião later appeared in the movie “Marajó, barreira do mar” (Marajó, Barrier of the Sea); The director, Líbero Luxardo, was one of the pioneers of cinema in the Amazon Region, playing the music of Maestro Waldemar Henrique. Commenting on his work in the film, one newspaper critic wrote, “The guitar solos of the Paraense Sebastião Tapajós are akin to those of some of the greatest guitar players in the world.”

In 1965, Sebastião made a special appearance in another of Líbero Luxardo's works "Um dia qualquer" (Someday), offering his interpretations of the songs "Tamba-Tajá" and "Uirapuru" by Maestro Waldemar Henrique as well as "Pregão de Cheiro" and "Toadas de Boi Bumbá" by Bruno de Menezes.

Sebastião's first two albums, Baile de Estudantes and Apresentando Sebastião Tapajós e Seu Conjunto, recorded in 1962 and 1963, capture the beauty and youth of the early 1960s. His interpretation of the decade positively marked the era, transporting us to a generous decade through songs packed with both the dreams of its conservative youth and that of the more "advanced," more "extravagant," lovers of rock n' roll.

These albums, as well as his subsequent performances on TV Marajoara, foreshadowed Sebastião Tapajós's journey towards becoming a guitarist recognized by critics for his skills and expertise worldwide.

Career, Performances, and International Prestige

Europe was the next natural step. There, Tapajós graduated from the National Conservatory of Music in Lisbon, Portugal in 1964, having been taught by Catalanian guitar master, Emílio Pujol. Later, at the Instituto de Cultura Hispanica in Spain, Tapajós studied under guitar master Saens de la Maza, performing in both Portugal and Spain.

After returning to Brazil, Tapajós was invited to teach classical guitar at the Conservatory Carlos Gomes in Belém where he settled until July of 1967. That year marked the release of his first solo album, "Violão é... Tapajós" produced by the label Philips. Tapajós later moved to Rio de Janeiro, devoting himself to researching both popular and folkloric music. Soon afterward, Tapajós moved to Berlin for some time, later returning to Rio de Janeiro, where he stayed until 1997. Tapajós finally made his return to Santarém later that year and has lived there ever since.

Gilson Peranzetta, Sebastião Tapajós, Sivuca e Maurício Einhorn.

Over the decades, Sebastião's international career boomed, an achievement gained through his magnificent performances and inspired recordings with the biggest names in Brazilian music.

Tapajós initially toured throughout Brazil, later being invited abroad to share the stage with many other artists: Zimbo Trio (at the Berlin Philharmonic Theatre), Baden Powell, Altamiro Carrilho, Sivuca, Maurício Einhorn, Hermeto Pascoal, Waldir Azevedo, Paulo Moura, Joel do Bandolim, Danilo Caymmi, Jane Duboc, Maria Creusa, Nilson Chaves, Arismar do Espírito Santo, Ney Conceição, Robertinho Silva, Gilson Peranzetta and percussionists Pedro Sorongo and Djalma Correia. Tapajós also played alongside the American Gerry Mulligan (in Brussels and Rome), with the Argentinian Astor Piazzolla and Cacho Tirao (as a guitar duo in Buenos Aires), with the Canadian Oscar Peterson (in Brussels and Rome), with the Cuban Paquito D'Rivera (in Europe, Argentina, and Brazil) and with the Spanish Paco de Lucia (in Europe).

Sebastião later played recitals and recorded his interpretations of the works of Cartola, Ary Barroso, Pixinguinha, Maestro Guerra-Peixe, Radamés Gnattali, and Villa-Lobos.

In partnership with architect and friend Billy Blanco, Sebastião composed the work “Desencanto,” for the soundtrack of the soap opera “História de Amor,” for a Brazilian TV show in 1995.

In addition to being a skillful, technical, and creative instrumentalist, Tapajós has authored a multitude of works in partnership with Marilena Amaral, Paulinho Tapajós, Billy Blanco, Antônio Carlos Maranhão, Avelino V. do Vale, and other such composers. His songs have been covered by numerous Brazilian interpreters such as Emilio Santiago, Miltinho, Pery Ribeiro, Jane Duboc, Maria Creuza, Fafá de Belém, Nilson Chaves, Ana Lengruber, Cristina Caetano, as well as Cuban Leo Brouwer and Argentine Cacho Tirao.

The Italian Carlo Domeniconi, one of the leading guitarists of the 20th century, composed a concert in honor of Tapajós. Occupying chair number 14, Tapajós continues his work as a founding member of the Academy of Arts and Letters of Santarém.

According to the jazz expert and Ph.D. professor in philosophy Valter Alnis Bezerra, “Sebastião Tapajós’s style of playing is vigorous and incisive, and the sound that he draws from the instrument is full bodied. He likes to use percussive effects, variations of timbre (of the sweetest sound, touching near the mouth of the instrument, the most metallic, close to the easel of the instrument), harmonic sounds, rhythmic repetition of chords in ostinato and other resources.”

From 1970 through 1974, Sebastião toured Argentina where he recorded another eight albums. In 1971, accompanying Paulinho da Viola and Maria Betânia, he toured Germany, Holland, Austria, and Belgium, resulting in the creation of the album “Nova Bossa Nova.” Tapajós later signed a contract which entailed his performance at twenty more concerts throughout the following year, reaching from Germany to Israel.

Two years later, Tapajós returned to Germany where he recorded the album “Bienvenido Tapajós” during a solo tour. In 1974, abroad once more, he recorded the album “Guitarra Fantástica,” later awarded the title of “Best selling foreign album in the year” by RCA in Germany. Tapajós released the album “Guitarra Latina” in 1975, winning the award of “Best foreign album” three years later. In 1976, he released the album “Terra,” releasing the albums “Clássicos da América do Sul” and “Guitarra & Amigos” in subsequent years. In 1977, Sebastião wrote the soundtrack “A Força de Xangô” for a film directed by Iberê Cavalcanti.

In 1978, Sebastião represented Germany as a guest at an international music festival promoted by the Netherlands that was broadcasted throughout Europe. That same year, he received the “Honor of Merit” from the Legislative Assembly of the state of Pará. In 1979, Sebastião released the award-winning album “Xingu,” which went on to be relaunched in several countries, including Japan, and is currently featured in this work. Later that year, Sebastião received yet another commendation, the Order of Merit called the “Grão-Pará.”

As of 1979, Sebastião Tapajós began inviting other artists to perform alongside him and around the world, among them Maurício Einhorn, Joel do Bandolim, as well as percussionists Pedro Sorongo, Djalma Correia, and the Zimbo Trio.

In 1981, the album “Guitarra Crioula” was released and considered “the best album of the year” in the folklore category by the Brazilian Association of Disc Producers. When it was released in Germany one year later, it was similarly awarded the “Grand Prize for album of the year.”

Continuing through 1982, Sebastião recorded the album “Sincopando,” in collaboration with the Zimbo Trio, later releasing the album in Brazil under the label “Zimbo Trio convida Sebastião Tapajós.” In 1983 and 1984, Tapajós received the SOCINPRO Trophy, granted by the Society of Interpreters and Phonographic producers for being an “erudite musician.” In 1984, Tapajós released the album “Todos os sons” in collaboration with Maurício Einhorn. Continuing their partnership, Tapajós and Einhorn composed music for the soundtrack of the film “Os homens do Presidente,” a documentary about Brazil’s struggling farm workers, directed by Paulo Rufino.

In 1986, he recorded the albums “Visões do Nordeste” and “Painel.” In 1987, L’Art Label released an album in which Tapajós recorded 15 songs by Heitor Villa-Lobos. In 1988, Tapajós released the album “Lado a Lado” with pianist Gilson Peranzetta. In 1989 came the albums “Brasilidade” with João Cortez and “Terra Brasis”, which received the award for “Best Foreign Album” in Germany.

Continuing his work with Gilson Peranzetta, Sebastião released the album “Reflections” at the turn of the decade. In 1992, the Brazilian Academy of Letters awarded him the title of “Best Brazilian Musician.” From 1990 to 1996, Tapajós recorded a series of discs under the L’Art Label, including the CDs “Romanza” and “Visões do Nordeste”. In 1997, Tapajós released the CDs “Afinidades” with Gilson Peranzetta, “Amazônia Brasileira” and “Ontem e Sempre” with Nilson Chaves. One year later, he released the CDs “Da Minha Terra” with Jane Duboc, and “Sebastião Tapajós Interpreta Radamés Gnattali e Guerra-Peixe,” a composition praised by music critics, featuring studies of the two renowned Brazilian authors. In 1999, Tapajós recorded the CD “Do Meu Gosto” with Gilson Peranzetta, featuring songs from Hamilton Costa.

In 1998, Tapajós conducted a series of studies on the rhythms of the Amazon, resulting in four independent CDs: “Encontro Com a Saudade,” “Instrumental Caboclo” (Soundtrack of the film “Lendas Amazônicas”), “Solos da Amazônia,” and “Solos do Brasil,” in partnership with Hermeto Pascoal and Gilson Peranzetta.

Since 2000

In 2000, Sebastião released the CD “Acorde Violão,” a work played on solo guitar in which Tapajós covers songs of Ary Barroso, Pixinguinha and Cartola, among other Brazilian composers. In 2002, he released the CD “Choros e Valsas do Pará” and toured Europe with these new tracks. In partnership with ballerina Carmen Del Rio, Sebastião presented the show “O Violão e a Bailarina” featuring the bassist Ney Conceição in Rio de Janeiro three years later. In 2010, Sebastião was offered the role of artistic director on the album “Cristina Caetano Interpreta Sebastião Tapajós & Parceiros.” In 2011, Tapajós produced and released the albums “Cordas do Tapajós” and “Conversas de Violões” with Argentinian guitarist, Sérgio Ábalos. One year later “Suite das Amazonas” was launched and the classic “Painel” was remastered, later becoming one of his best-known works. In 2013, he toured Brazil in tandem with the release of his CD “Da Lapa Ao Mascote,” later releasing the DVD “Sebastião Tapajós e Amigos Solistas.” On May 16, 2013, Sebastião received the title of “Doctor Honoris Causa” from the State University of Pará (UEPA) and on November 11th of the same year, “Doctor Honoris Causa” from the Federal University of West Pará (UFOPA).

Sebastião Tapajós continues to compose, having remained relevant throughout the decades by experimenting with new aesthetics and working to continually revise his vast output.

Sebastião Tapajós lives amidst the trees and on the banks of the river Tapajós, married to Tanya Maria Souza de Figueiredo Marcião. In April of 2017, the Sebastião Tapajós Institute was created with the aim of disseminating his musical production and other projects.

Discography

The listed albums are in chronological order. Among these albums, those released throughout the 60s, 70s, and 80s were remastered and re-launched in CD format. Some of these discs reached the market simultaneously in countries such as Germany, Japan, and Spain with different covers. For this reason, some titles may appear several times. Some of these CDs were only released for a limited amount of time and are now considered rare. Sebastião Tapajós is currently cataloging his works for a re-mastering of all his past recordings.

The master guitarist Sebastião Tapajós, christened Sebastião Pena Marcião, quite literally made a name for himself only after adopting the name of a beloved river. Renowned for both his phenomenal technique and his scholarship, Tapajós created a strand of Brazilian guitar music that combines the classic and popular with the regional folklore of the Amazon. His numerous compositions, the product of a career lasting more than 60 years, are unceasingly re-recorded throughout the world (with some of these versions presented in this work). His 90 albums, comprising both his own music and classic covers, remain in demand internationally, sold and stocked in their original formats and within compilations found throughout the Internet. Tapajós's global standing has brought attention to Brazilian culture, the Amazon region and particularly the state of Pará, to which he dedicates special deference. His name is an homage to the stream and the land from which he voyaged to attain worldwide acclaim, and the place where he returned and lives to this day: the river Tapajós.
